To The Memory of

Walter E. Riedel and Wallace Lishen.

With overalls on and faces bright,
These boys left their homes,
Little thinking, "ere another night,
They would lie dead alone.

The roar of steam, the crash of timbers,
The boiler's leaden boom,
The gallant engine's panting breath,
Were echoes of their doom.

Fond mothers, little did you think
The farewell words so lightly said
Would be the last on earth to them,
The lowly grave their bed.

But God knows best, it was his will
To call your brave boys home;
They are waiting now at pearly gates
Bidding their loved ones come.

Though the train lost part of its brave, young crew
And sorrow to your hearts is given,
Yet try to know your loss is their gain,
They have made their home run to heaven.
